

YOUR CHOICE?

- You arrive at your internship site excited to begin. Your supervisor looks at you in a puzzled manner. She says, why are you wearing a nose ring? Didn't you read the staff manual I sent over a month ago? It specifically states that this is inappropriate attire if working at our agency. What do you do?

RELATIONSHIPS

- It was the very last thing on your mind. You met a co-worker that sweeps you off your feet. You have not felt like this – ever in your life. This could be love! How are you going to handle this relationship?

THE BOSS FROM HELL

- You had great interactions with your supervisor during the initial process of obtaining your internship. After about two weeks of intense work, your boss quits speaking to you. Your boss avoids you and conversations are short and to the point. Co-workers let you know in confidence that it will only get worse. What do you do?

LIFE AFTER INTERNSHIP

- You have about 4 weeks before your internship ends. Reality sets in and you become anxious about finding a full-time job. Things are extremely busy with your internship. How are you going to search for that perfect job? Interview, make phone calls, search the net, etc?

NOT WHAT YOU EXPECTED

- You show up ready to work. After one week of work, you are depressed. This is not what you expected. Your duties are different from your initial expectations. You thought you were going to be in the field running programs and working with clients – instead your are engaged in round the clock maintenance duties. What do you do?

Interpersonal Dilemmas

- Your agency supervisor is having an affair with one of the other interns and that person is getting preferential treatment for assigned duties and time off. How will you address this situation?

Gossip & Innuendos

- A friend from work has been getting time off during your busiest weekend programs to volunteer at a local civic center. You later hear through the “grapevine” that he made the whole thing up because he is feeling overworked. What would you do?

Party Time

- A group from work is going to have a keg party and everyone is invited including your supervisors. You really want to go and let loose. What would you do?
